“The glaring shortage of top-tier institutions means that the most talented students leave the country and vast majority of them never return home. What is still more worrisome is that a large number of Indian students who undertook doctorate studies and obtained their degrees in the United States of America, did not return home. Hence, it would be safe to infer that given that the Indian higher education system under-grades research weakly, several of those who are truly research-oriented seek doctoral education abroad, further enfeebling research capability in India”
